How did the Fund perform during the reporting period?

For the period January 1, 2025 through September 30, 2025, the Cantor Fitzgerald High Income Fund (the "Fund") Institutional Class (ATPYX) generated a 5.30% total return, underperforming the 7.2% return of the Bloomberg U.S. Corporate High Yield Index (the "High Yield Index or Index"). The underperformance of ATPYX in the period may be attributed to the Fund's focus on higher quality credits and shorter duration, among other factors. The major drivers of performance for the U.S. Corporate High Yield market were primarily high starting yields, resilient company fundamentals, and tightening credit spreads. Performance was generally positive, with high yield bonds outperforming U.S. Treasuries, particularly in the first half of 2025, but was accompanied by increased volatility due to shifting interest rate expectations and policy uncertainty.

Although High Yield bonds saw a quick, knee-jerk reaction to proposed tariffs announced in early April, the Index recovered quickly. Supply/demand dynamics in the High Yield market provided a strong bid for bonds from yield-hungry investors, as a large portion of the new issues were related to refinance activity. Performance over the period was strong across credit quality, with CCC-rated issues leading the market higher, up 8.1%, compared to BB's (+7.4%) and B-rated bonds returning 6.8%.

With an underweight position in the Communication sector (4.9% vs. 15.3%) during the period and the Fund's positions in the sector producing lower returns than those in the Index (8.8% vs. 9.7%), the Communication sector detracted about 26 basis points from performance. Additionally, an overweight position in the Consumer Cyclical sector (23.9% vs. 19.7%) detracted from performance as positions in the portfolio (+5.9%) and the Index (+6.8%) both trailed the overall High Yield market (+7.2%). However, the Fund benefitted from its slightly overweight position in the Other Industrials sector (3.1% vs. 1.1%), as its lone position in the sector (Tutor Perini Corp. 11.875% due 2029) was up 9.8%, adding 8 basis points in incremental return.
